to keep part of its area to provide centralized work space for some 6000 personnel now scattered around the area. The Navy has not disclosed its plans, but it is thought to be considering sites on the Capitol Beltway in Virginia.

The Committee said that costly facilities should not be built here "to house Navy activities which could just as well be performed... at existing installations elsewhere in the United States."

What brought the matter to a head was the District's request to tear down some temporary Navy barracks in the path of its Anacostia freeway.

Retirement Pay Increase Voted

Associated Press

The House voted yesterday to increase retirement pay for 114,000 officers and enlisted men in amounts ranging from $6 a year for privates to $4586 a year for chiefs of staff.

The men retired before a 1958 military pay increase went into effect. The bill, which now goes to the Senate, is designed to bring their retirement pay into line with the new pay scales created for active pay personnel.

Cost of the bill is estimated at $30 million a year.

The wide range in amounts to be paid reflects the 1958 pay scales, which were designed to induce senior grade officers to remain in service by granting them substantial salary increases.

The largest annual increase in enlisted men's retirement pay is $113 for Master Sergeants.
